

Senior Regulatory Affairs Specialist

Our expertise stems from our people. We strive to foster a dynamic environment of development and growth. Our team members are committed and talented individuals who enjoy turning their expertise into solutions for their clients. This is the reason today's most successful and fastest growing companies trust the leadership, direction and assistance we provide.

Position overview: You will be involved in developing strategies that ensure client compliance of food, drugs, medical devices, natural health products and dietary supplements with appropriate domestic and international government agency regulations. This role is responsible to liaise between clients and government agencies in both Canada and the USA to ensure all stakeholders have accurate information and a clear understanding of all quality-related aspects throughout product registration.

The ideal candidate: We are seeking someone with 10+ years' experience along with a masters in science. Experience working for a consulting firm is preferred. Extensive knowledge of GMP, HACCP, FSMA and labelling is required.

In addition to the appropriate credentials, we value the following qualities in our team members:

- personality characterized by high quality standards, responsibility and engagement
- ability to interact with a range of personalities and many levels of external and internal clients.
- excellent organizational, interpersonal and communication skills in English

- self-motivated and enjoy taking initiative
- project management skills with ability to prioritize
- attention to and ability to execute details
- adaptable to changing environment, client and project needs
- knowledge of Canadian, US and international regulations for food, NHP and dietary supplements, this is a definite advantage

We attribute our success to these core values:

1. Consistent commitment to our clients and their business growth
2. Strategic approaches to regulatory and scientific affairs that deliver solutions
3. Specialized expertise and a passion for the industries we work in
